CONGRESSIONAL HAPPENINGS IN WASHINGTON

By CLARENCE J. BROWN
Member of Congress,
Seventh Ohio District

The die has been cast; precedent has been broken; a Franklin Delano Roosevelt is a candidate on the Democratic ticket for a third term as President. His nomination, as predicted in this column many times, was a foregone conclusion, unless he himself refused to accept the nomination and be a candidate. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt did not refuse and so the fight is on between Roosevelt and Willkie. The campaign will be hard fought, spectacular, and interesting every foot of the way seems certain.

Up on Capitol Hill, and throughout official life generally, the long awaited statement of President Roosevelt to a third term, as issued at the Democratic National Convention last week through Senator Barkley, came as a decided anti-climax. The President's secretiveness during the past few months regarding his plans brought all sorts of conjectures and wild guesses as to what he would finally say or do. Then, when it was announced from the White House that Senator Barkley would issue a statement from President Roosevelt to the Democratic Convention, all the political minded citizens of the country, both Democrats and Republicans, waited tensely to see what the announcement would be. Practically all expected it to be a plain definite statement, one way or the other. The country was not prepared to receive the sly, evasive words that were uttered and, despite the fact that the Convention proceeded to nominate Mr. Roosevelt according to schedule, the reaction in the Convention and over the country generally certainly was not beneficial to the President. While in his statement the President said he had not been seeking re-nomination, and was not a candidate therefore, and that all delegates to the Convention were free to vote as they pleased, the fact remains that by his very failure to definitely state he was not a candidate and would not accept the nomination, he in fact, told the Convention that he would accept the nomination. Such a statement, when considered in connection with the actions of Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, who is the President's closest friend and who lives in the White House with him, in attending the Convention and heading the drive to "draft Roosevelt" proves beyond question that Roosevelt did seek the third term nomination and used the smartest possible methods to obtain it.

While Congress is back in session, following the recess of the Democratic Convention, but little legislative work is being done this week. A number of important committees, however, are in session giving consideration to major legislation that will soon come before Congress for action.

There has been considerable agitation over sending American ships in to the war zone to remove refugees, especially English children. The sending of United States ships across the seas for such a purpose would be a direct violation of the Neutrality Act and the proclamation of the President issued thereunder. It is also being pointed out that English ships are resending American ports almost daily to obtain needed war supplies, and that such ships can bring English children, seeking passage to America, without the necessity of sending American ships overseas and placing the United States in danger of involvement in the present conflict. Just recently a ruling was made permitting the entry of English refugee children into the United States as "refugees" for the duration of the war without regard to the present immigration quotas.

While, of course many Democratic Members of Congress were in attendance at the Democratic National Convention, most of the Republican Members, and quite a few of the Democratic Members, took advantage of the recess to return to their home and, incidentally to look over their political fences.

Behind the scenes the Administration drive to obtain a sufficient number of votes to adjourn Congress sine die continues, in spite of public demands that the national legislative body stay on the job. Political wise-men are predicting that as the November election approaches and the Presidential campaigns warm up, many Democratic Members of Congress will be unable to longer withstand the Administration pressure for adjournment and that sine die adjournment will probably come some time in September.

"What Is It?" Is The Main Question
Dr. C. M. Ritchie brings to this office somewhat of a garden novelty. He planted what was thought to be and from all appearances was a seed potato. The seed, sprouted and the vine grew with the appearance of the tomato stem and somewhat like the tomato leaf.

The root had attached three smooth potatoes somewhat smaller than an egg. On the vine was a cluster of fruit formed like green grapes in a cluster but when cut open were more solid than the tomato but contained seeds like the tomato.

The plant had grown to the average size potato vine plant but erect like tomato in formation. It is one of the freaks of the garden with no name or explanation as to formation.

Tennis Champs At Wilberforce

That Greene County and the Miami Valley are in for a rare tennis treat when the Championships of the American Tennis Association are played on the courts of Wilberforce University August 19-24, inclusive, can be seen by the fever pitch in which the state and district meets are getting under way with resulting unexpected upsets.

This playoff will be followed by tournaments in Philadelphia, Chicago, New York City and West Virginia State College. By the time the "Nationals" are played at Wilberforce, a crescendo of enthusiasm will have reached such a height that a prediction as to their outcome will be a mere gesture.

The Senate Military Committee, controlled by Democrats, Tuesday voted to recommend for passage the Bark-Wadsworth military bill demanded by the New Deal which will require on passage the registration of all males in this country between the ages of 18-64 with no exemptions.

The bill also provides for conscription, the same form used in England, France and Germany, of 1,500,000 young men between the ages of 21 and 30, starting October 1, 1940.

Those of this age must serve one year in a military training camp under government control with a base pay of $21 a month. The bill provides for the next draft to be between the ages of 21 and 45 years of age.

After a year in training in government military training camp a draftee would be assigned to a reserve unit for 10 years, or until he reached the age of 45, and would be subject to additional training when called. Sen. Vandenberg, Mich. Republican, opposed the bill, which will be fought by Republican Senators when it comes on the floor for debate.

O. N. G. MARRIED MEN GIVEN CHANCE TO RESIGN

The Ohio National Guard is vitally affected by recent modified regulations issued by the U. S. War Department, designed to ease the manifold personal complications confronting the 50,000 National Guardsmen facing probable mobilization, such as contemplated by President Roosevelt. State Adjutant General have been advised to permit married men in the lower ranks to resign if they can not respond to an order for extended active military training without inflicting a hardship on their families. Under the new official policy governing service in the National Guard, only single men will fill the three lowest ranks of private, corporal and sergeant. Married men already in these ranks will be permitted to resign. The policy does not apply to the higher enlisted ranks of master, technical sergeant and staff, which carry pay considered sufficient to provide for dependents. The War Department has recommended a minimum of a year's active duty for the Guardsmen. The President has announced his intention to call four National Guard divisions to active duty as soon as Congress approves. On active duty the civilian soldier has the same status as a regular army trooper, whose base pay is $21 a month, though commissioned and non-commissioned officers and skilled specialists receive more.

HOW MANY PEOPLE APPROVE CONSCRIPTION?

Now that Roosevelt is determined to push his famous conscription bill for passage in congress, how many people are ready to give approval to such a law? Different plans have been suggested by administration leaders and army and navy officials. The ages for signing up run from 18 years for young men to 65 for elders. It is also suggested and plans are under way even before the passage of the law that both boys and girls of 18 years up to 25 will be placed in government camps for some sort of military training.

Various agencies and different publications have undertaken polls of public sentiment and of the three we have been following, the Gallup, Pathfinder and Times-Star polls, all show a decided opposition to the draft.

The opposition varies in even sections of the same city. In wards of the well-to-do there is a majority for conscription and compulsory military service in some cities. Among the average class of citizens sentiment is more evenly divided. In the smaller cities and towns the opposition is strong against any plan. In rural sections outside of towns 95 per cent of those polled object to the Roosevelt idea. The Pathfinder poll runs 91.6 against, to 8.4 per cent favorable.

Following the Democratic convention and the break in party lines many Democratic members of the House are expected to leave the Roosevelt ranks and vote against conscription in the present form. Most Republicans now oppose the plan but the majority rests with the Democrats in both House and Senate.

Army leaders before the House military committee openly admit the voluntary enlistment, for both army and navy has failed. Before the last convention to save the issue from being brought to the floor, Roosevelt suggested that the militia from all states be called to camp at once. Numerous states do not have a militia of any size.

SUSPICION IN PAN-AMERICAN PROPOSAL

The experience this country has had through the Roosevelt-Hull free trade treaties with various nations certainly should be a warning to the movement now at the Pan gathering in Havana, Cuba, where Hull seems to be the dominant leader at the opening session.

The cartel trade system of this nation buying up foreign products to keep those countries from selling to Germany means this country is to be the goat and probably end in war being waged on this side of the world. No dependence can be placed in the Latin countries of South America standing at our side one year or ten years hence. Brazil has already notified this country she will buy and sell where she can do the best either in England or Germany. Argentina is now the gainer on all English purchases of grain and meats, both being sold at lower prices than can be possible here. If Germany wins in Europe she can continue the barter system of exchange which not one or twenty nations can meet.

The Roosevelt proposal for this country putting up five hundred million dollars in a paper bank to purchase Latin American foods and manufactured goods, is only a proposal to make trading easier for Hull at the Havana meeting. If such was done there is no means of holding any neighbor country to the plan even a month from now. The agreement no doubt would last as long as the five hundred million lasts and then what?

Every farm organization that we know of in this country is openly against the Roosevelt-Hull proposal. The idea of this country purchasing such a vast amount of food stuffs when we have a big surplus here is mere child's play and would send present farm commodity prices even lower. There then would be no chance of us having a foreign market for either farm or manufactured goods. Not so long ago Roosevelt joined this country in the Pan-American bank in which this nation provided most of the money and we have but one vote as a stockholder while 20 other nations on the Western hemisphere each have one vote and little or no investment. It may be a generous attitude but childish from the standpoint of good business judgment. Again it is only a sample of how spendthrifts can fool away other people's money.

As we see it there is not the least chance that this nation can profit in friendly relations or in exchange of farm or manufactured goods over the normal course of competitive trade relations, permitting the old established rule of supply and demand to govern conditions here as well as in neighboring countries. If the plan does not work or is not satisfactory to one or more countries the whole thing falls just like the League of Nations, the World Court and a lot of fantastic ideas that are backed by a thin veil of theory and no possible chance of success other than what the selfishness at home or abroad will permit.

It looks like the New Dealers will provide most of the comedy for the coming Presidential election in November. The reaction to the Communist element taking over control of the Democratic convention seems to be gnawing at the vitals of the staid old conservative leaders. Regardless of fact that Southern Democratic leaders, who have not cherished the New Deal by any means they have been good soldiers, and gone along to keep the party intact. At the same time they have secretly deplored the action of Roosevelt in not keeping the name of the party that first nominated him, to the front. It might be thrown in at this point the Democrats nominated the Hyde Park Squire but it took Republican votes to elect him. The Democratic convention, under the leadership of Hopkins, Iches, Cohen and a long list of known Communists, turned the heat on the Southern Democrats. When you take that attitude against such men as Byrnes, Barkley, Garner and a lot of other Southern men of cloth, trouble is bound to start.

President Garner was not a candidate for vice president, for president, or for anything else. He was a man of a unanimous vote. The fact that such a vote at the end is a mere formality in both party conventions does not mean every delegate was for one candidate and no other.

When it comes to a "purge" James A. Farley took the blistering with good grace just like it would be expected of him based on his past seven years as head of the party machinery. That the convention would have given James a majority vote is very probable had it not been for the fact that near 800 delegates of the 1,094 were either federal or state elective or appointees. It was voted as Roosevelt ordered or off would go their heads at the pay committee. Elective officials with creeds to understand "no more free government spending" if the Roosevelt order was violated in not making it possible for that famous "draft". The inside of what Democratic delegates had forced on them makes interesting reading and more will come out as the campaign progresses and days and months roll by. Farley had been given to understand as late as the week before that Roosevelt would not accept a nomination and this was given him direct in conference with the Chief. Paul McNutt of Indiana had been a candidate but FDR sided internal revenue officers after Paul and his little balloon soon had the gas willed. At that the convention wanted to name McNutt for vice president as a rebuke to Roosevelt but the Communists had control of the Democratic Jackass and rode the animal to win. Roosevelt had put Farley out of the presidential race months ago when he charged that his "religion" (Farley's) kept him from being a potential candidate. This again was paving the way for that "draft" you have heard about.

When the delegates heard the name of Secretary Wallace for vice president the convention was in an uproar with cat calls, hisses and boos. Here again was shown the hand of the Communists who passed the word that only Wallace would be acceptable to the main spring in the White House. By this time the old Democratic party, even the branch from the Southern states, was at fever heat and dire threats were made, even personal encounters threatened, behind closed doors of caucus gatherings. What was said out among the warring groups cannot be put in print other than to say the "lip campaign" of which Roosevelt complained last winter was at work again.

The upshot of the fight was Farley refuses to guide the Roosevelt-Wallace campaign. Vice President Garner this week left Washington, D. C., probably not to return and may offer his resignation after reaching his home in Texas. Democratic leaders are switching to Wilkie, Republican nominee. Hundreds of others will not commit themselves publicly but newsmen learn they will neither contribute financially nor give aid personally to the party nominees. The excuse will be found in "no third terms for any president" and the objection to Sec. Wallace as vice presidential nominee.

The Ohio delegation headed by Charles Sawyer had to swallow its dose. Sawyer was a "favorite son candidate" and headed the state delegation and cast the Ohio vote for Roosevelt as a gracious thing to do politically although it was known that more than half of the state delegation was and had been against third term nominations. Sawyer's name came up for vice president but only after a fight against the White House control of the convention. One Ohio delegate had to fight six Chicago policemen to even get Sawyer's name spoken in the convention. Having done that he even went so far as to mention two others and inform the police that "this is no Hitler convention". It was just that and nothing else. The Ohio crowd also had its troubles over the Davey for governor candidacy and the harmony program.

News men attending the convention say it was really pitiable the position Sec. Wallace found himself at the convention. He had been informed by the White House days before that he would be the nominee and he had his acceptance speech already prepared. He sat on the platform at the rear in a very nervous mood waiting for that "draft" that was to flow in the minutes the window was opened. Instead Southern Democrats sprang other names and the McNutt followers came to the front. Each time a delegate or delegation would cast a vote for Wallace the house would ring with boos and hisses. Parades formed among the few remaining delegates protesting Wallace but "orders are orders from the White House just as they are in Germany today. The innocence of the vice presidential candidate to be was really pitiable we are told by newsmen who was on the platform. At one time Wallace asked first if and then another of the newsmen if they knew who the delegates were booing. Strange to say the newsmen only answered "they did not know". After all Wallace did not get to give his written speech.

The Democrats had a lot of fun when they heard that Wendell Wilkie, former Democrat, had been nominated for the presidency on the Republican ticket. At the Chicago convention the followers of the donkey changed their mind and concluded the traditional "donkey" was not a four-legged animal but a two-legged individual that occupied seats on the convention floor. Neither Roosevelt in his acceptance speech or Wallace had a word to say for the Democratic party. It was not the convention honoring two nominees but a lot of mumps taking orders from the White House.

Wallace was reared in a Republican family, whose father was Secretary of Agriculture under two Republican administrations. The rule "Like father like son" did not apply in this home. It was a case of the son knowing more from his father even in his teen years. Education had out-educated him. The father in his half century lifetime of active business career had become the foremost agricultural editor, farmer and business executive west of the Mississippi river. He had for years conducted experiments at his own expense that later were fruitful to every farmer in America. His broad Iowa acres always showed productive crops. His live stock was the attraction for thousands of farmers yearly. Best of all his large farm interests brought neat profits.

When the elder Wallace laid down his editorial pen a million dollar publishing business and extensive farm lands fell under the control of the junior Wallace management. What had been a success was cast aside as "antique" for new ideas yet untried. The same fate befell the publishing business when attempt was made to put every line of farm news in the U. S. under the Wallace thumb. The young mind was then far beyond the bank balance and assets left by the father. Here is where the banker was sought for more funds but the young mind had not kept the approach of "pay day" on his note book. Things went from bad to worse by experiment and then the Iowa sheriff at the request of the bank took charge and sold what was once a big paying business to satisfy a court judgment. The Indiana Farmer today has a $350,000 judgment against the Wallace interests but unpaid.

The elder Roosevelt was just a bit more far sighted in his family affairs than the elder Wallace. When the elder Roosevelt made his will he evidently pictured to himself the end of what would be in store if some strings were not tied to the family fortune of a million or two, made in the coal business. When the will was read young Franklin discovered he would have a life-time guardian and not be permitted to squander the family fortune as evidently was his want in his tender years. He only shares in the income his life time when the estate goes to Franklin's sons. When you read in your daily paper of the national debt jumping by the billion almost every week you might take a second to consider whether or not there should not be some strings tied to the hand that is loading coming generations with billions of debt instead of increasing the assets of individuals, states or the nation.

If what Secretary Wallace says is true he never was a Republican. He boldly states that he supported Al Smith when he ran for president. That his first step was along Socialist lines when he voted for LaFollette for president. He admits he voted for Roosevelt but not for other Democrats. He has gone from the Socialist idea of government over to the Communist idea along with Hopkins, Iches, Perkins and that element in control of the Democratic party appointed by Roosevelt. It is a long lane that has no turn and the old time Democrats certainly have to swallow much of their pride of the past and wonder just what the future has in store for the ideal of Thomas Jefferson and a democracy such as was known in the days of Grover Cleveland and even Woodrow Wilson.

Republicans have something at stake in the result of the Chicago convention. It is reported that Sec. of War Stimson, and Sec. Navy Knox, both Republicans, accepted the cabinet places, on condition that Roosevelt was not to be a candidate for a third

Popular Hardy Family Brings Joy To Screen in "Andy Hardy Meets Debutante"

Show Andy Hardy a pretty face and he's all set for uproarious new love and laugh adventures. time. It is said both accepted on this promise. Both had been offered the positions last December for Roosevelt was anxious to enlist Republican support to help make good his promise of men and money to King George to prosecute the war in Europe. Both Stimson and Knox declined the first offer. They accepted the second on the no third term promise which has proven just a Hitler promise. The public by this time knows the Roosevelt promise is worthless, at least a lot of Democrats will hold up their right hand and swear so. The question now is what will Stimson and Knox do?

The appointment of Stimson and Knox had put a lot of young folks on even basis when it comes to the draft or even escaping the draft. Before either accepted their posts there was a rush of Democrats trying to annex their sons to government jobs to escape the draft. We are told both Republican appointees stand square on the statement that if congress at the request of Roosevelt passes his proposed draft law, all will be called between the ages required and even those now on government jobs will be included. If you have flat feet or are under weight you are still in the draft for some other job than parading with a gun on your shoulder. This will be unwelcome news to a certain Democrat in this county that has a preferred list for exemptions to the draft.

There is one automobile in the community that will not run very far with water as a substitute for gasoline. A local farmer tells us an interesting story of how he put a car on the blink by watering his gasoline. As has been his custom he purchased gas in quantities and kept it in a barrel on the farm. One morning not long ago he noticed a heel mark in the dust that did not correspond to his. As he kept tab on the amount of gasoline purchased and the amount drawn out each time and checking the barrel contents discovered some one had been helping himself.

To make sure he moved this barrel and substituted another in which he put one gallon of gasoline and four gallons of water. Two nights later he was awakened just as he heard a gate rattle. Running to the door he could not distinguish who the two parties were nor the make of the car of the roadster type. On the first trip six young fries weighing about three pounds each had been lifted from a coop. Keeping silent and with eyes open and ears close to the ground he found that a car of the above description had to be pushed in—probably to drain the water out of the gasoline tank. Few people have any idea of the amount of gasoline that is stolen every week of the year in this community.

The Theft of the gasoline recalls an

Life Saver

By Charles Edwin Lammie

"They tell me that the parachute plan in war is not working out as well. Two many of the men are hurt in leaving the airplane, or in landing," said Jim Monahan in discussing the war.

"Well, anyhow, it's another one of those modern ideas that must be tried," opined Mike Akles. "It may work to an advantage, and it may not."

"You're right, Mike, it's a matter of trying a new idea to see how it works. They have made much progress in the use of the airplane since the Wright brothers made their first flight. It is here to stay," commented Jim.

"But speaking of parachutes," Jim continued, "it reminds me of some parachute leaps I saw as a small boy. There was always a balloon ascension followed by a parachute leap at the county fair and at the big celebrations on the Fourth. I will never forget one. A twelve-year-old boy almost lost his life. I was thirteen then. The balloon was nearly filled in the regular way with hot air and smoke from a fire underneath. Just before the take-off, about twenty men and a lot of us boys held to the guy ropes until all was in readiness. At the about 'Let her go' from the balloonist, each one was to release the rope in his hand and run away. That boy did not let go. The next instant he was dangling in the air. The rope was untwined about his left arm. We expected any moment that he would drop to the ground. His arm might be torn off. The great crowd was horrified. Mothers were frantic, each one thinking it might be her boy. Fathers ran to keep beneath the balloon in the vain hope of catching the lad if he fell. 'I'll save him! I'll save him!' shouted back the rising balloonist. He pulled the ropes, let out the gas slowly, and from its height of a thousand feet, the thing began to come down. It went over the river in its tragic flight and across the railway tracks, fanned by the breeze. The crowd rushed over vacant lots, over the river bridge, and down the railroad. The veteran balloon man made a fine landing. A dozen men and boys were at the spot. The kid was seized, the rope unwound, and he was speeded to a doctor's office. The people were speechless for a moment, and then began to inquire who the boy was."

"As I recall he was not hurt seriously. He had thoughtlessly wound the rope about his arm to have a better hold. He failed to let go at the signal. The balloon man expected to make a parachute jump that day, but he didn't. He became a life saver. He probably showed greater skill in saving that boy than he would have done in coming down in the regular way. Anyhow it was a thrilling sight."

"Say, Jim, I want to ask you this. Don't you think that God had a lot to do with that?" asked Mike.

"Yes, Mike, I do," continued Jim. "That's what I call providential. God used the skill of the balloon man to save the boy's life. I hope he became a good and useful man. I hope too that the war in Europe will soon end. Men in all nations need to give God a chance to work in them like that balloon man did."

"I believe you are right, Jim," said Mike.
